Common broth

8

Prepared daily with love. Ask your innkeeper what delicious combination has been simmering on the stove.

Dragon trichobezoars

13

The dragon doesn't digest onions nor his prey's hair, which forces him to regularly spit out everything that doesn't contribute to his regime. We harvest those "hairballs" daily to take out the onions, fry them and serve them with a mustard, curry and honey sauce.

Dragon claws

14

Hot calabrese dry sausage in a fried dough. Served with a mustard, curry and honey sauce. A good one to share.

Dragon hatchling wings

Slightly spiced, they make the cognoscenti happy. The perfect appetizer to share.

Gargantua's Platter

It is told that Gargantua mobilized 17 913 cows from Pantille and Bréhémont while he was a suckling child. As an adult, the famous giant ate a tremendous quantity of tripes, grilled meats, hams and other games on a daily basis.

Let it be said that he was not the only one who loved to eat till bursting. In the Middle Ages, the quantity of food served was as important as its quality to make good impression in a banquet. The guests were forging alliances and friendships while making all kinds of excesses during collective feasts.

In memory of those great banquets, l'Auberge offers you the chance to order a gargantuan feast for parties from 2 to 12 people. Your feast will be served in an impressive platter with all the consideration you deserve.

CHOICE OF SIDES

"Saxonne" fries

Stout and sprinkled with the Devil's spices.

"Pétaque" fries

Thin, crispy and sprinkled with sweetened cinnamon.

"Confit" fries

Invented by Julienne, it's the salty and common kind.

"Gallettes"

Created in Hambourg in 971 after an argument broke between the chef François de Bovin and his wife. One of the most popular plates was "the hilt" (minced meat shaped in the form of a sword hilt, i.e. round). Thus, as the argument was building, the enraged Bovin threw a hilt at his wife. It smashed against a wall and landed in a frying pan. That's how the patty was born. Bread, toppings and fries came later on. Another accident made History.

Gargantuan Galette

To share between two 125

A "galette" made for the biggest eater of all times: two pounds of meat and sausages, one pound of bacon, sharp cheddar, caramelized onions, stewed confit cherry tomatoes. Gargantuan!

If you manage to eat it all, we'll give you a rare magical item: the BOTTOMLESS HORN OF FRIES.
As you can imagine, the beast is quite thick, so be aware of an additional preparation time.

Master chef's inspiration

Root vegetables confit

During the first crusade, in the winter of 1096, the notorious marshal Poutin the third and his 150 men were stuck in the snow for three months in the Isola del Cantone pass (i.e. very remote place). Very soon, the food supplies of the tiny village (29 inhabitants) came to an end. All that was left was some locally made cheese and some old root vegetables (potatoes, carrots, parsnip...). Once candied and coated with sauce, these roots were quite good and nutritious.

Poutin was married to a beautiful Italian woman, and his descendants took the name of Poutini... funny how the people of the Bois-Francs region think that they invented everything!

Moist chocolate cake with cranberry and Grand Marnier chutney

Melting and tender moist dark chocolate cake served with a cranberry and grand marnier chutney, coated with a rich caramel.

9

Rum cheese cake

Sometimes we go a bit too far... This might be one of those times. Graham crackers crust, cream cheese cake marbled with a fruit and rum coulis, topped with a sweet crumble.

9

"Gâteau de la mort miraculeux"

Prepared for the first time at the wake of the great-grandfather of the innkeeper, an old man who was known to be a bit of a sorcerer and an alchemist, this cake has a strange story attached to it. It is said that the chocolate chips turned into gold while baking, and thus made its unique heir, your host, quite rich.

To honor this legend, if you find a dried fruit in your cake, the innkeeper will pay for all the food you ate. Please note that you will still have to pay for your drinks, we're not that rich!

Covered with a delicious fondant chocolate, this banana and chocolate chips cake is highly recommended for decadent desserts lovers.
